Dear Lyman:

It was a pleasure to welcome you to our campus. Your exceedingly lucid, informative talk about the role of the Agency was a small masterpiece. Not only our students but several of our rather critical faculty were high in their praises of your presentation. I myself was especially envious of the adroit way you fielded several of the bouncing questions that followed your talk.

The apparent increased willingness on the part of major Agency people to talk about the essential operational principles and general procedures is, it seems to me, a sound move. The fact that we can now admit that the Agency exists certainly helps us in attracting eligible, qualified applicants. Your talk, naturally enough, stirred up a good deal of interest; I have been more or less earning my keep this last week. I am enclosing a clipping from our student newspaper along with a handsome, flattering portrait.

With all good wishes and kind personal regards, I am

Very sincerely yours,

Jim Robertson
